for dinner.

"Did you get moon cakes?"
Mai asked.

"I want moon cakes," cried Mai.
"We have eight moon cakes,"
said Mother. "But it's wrong to touch them now. We must make dinner first."

"We'll tie lights above us like more moons," said Mother. "We will say thank you for all we have."
"I will say thank you for moon cakes,"
thought Mai.

The family ate dinner together.
Grandfather told the story about a lady who lived in the moon.
“We can each make a wish,” he said.

Mai looked at the moon cakes.
She made the same wish she had made all day. Then she gave a happy laugh. She knew her wish would soon come true!

Moon Cakes and the Moon Festival

Read Together

The Chinese Moon Festival is a little like Thanksgiving. It is celebrated at the end of the harvest season. On this day, Chinese families gather together. They tell the story about a lady who lived in the moon. They give each other small, round moon cakes. Some moon cakes have a yellow egg yolk in the middle. The yolk looks like a bright, full moon!
